The People's University (UoPeople) is the world's first free online university. To learn more about how this online school works, I interviewed UoPeople founder Shai Reshef. Here's what he had to say: A: University of the People is the world's first free online academic institution. I founded UoPeople to democratize higher education and make university-level studies available to students around the world, even in the poorest parts of the world. Using open source technology and materials with a peer-to-peer pedagogical system, we can create a global whiteboard that does not discriminate based on geographical or financial constraints. A: When UoPeople opens its virtual gates, we will offer associate, university and master's degrees: such as a degree in Business Administration and a BSc in Computer Science. The University plans to offer other educational options in the future. A: Full-time students will be able to complete their degree in about four years and all students will be entitled to an associated degree after two years. A: Yes, the resume is internet-based. UoPeople students will learn in online study communities where they will share resources, exchange ideas, discuss weekly topics, present assignments, and take exams, all under the guidance of respected scholars. A: Enrollment requirements include proof of graduation in a secondary school such as 12-year proof of school, knowledge of English, and access to a computer with an Internet connection. Prospective students will be able to enroll online UoPeople.edu. With minimal admission criteria, UoPeople aims to provide higher education to anyone who welcomes the opportunity. A: At the beginning, the stages, we will have to limit the to best serve our students. A: UoPeople will accept students regardless of their position or citizenship status. It is a that anticipates students from every corner of the globe. A: UoPeople expects tens of thousands of students to enroll within the first five years of operation, although enrollment will be limited to 300 students in the first semester. The power of online networking and word-of-mouth marketing will facilitate the growth of the University, while the open source and peer-to-peer pedagogical model will allow you to manage such a rapid expansion. A: My personal goal is to make higher education a right for all, not a privilege for the few. The registration criteria are minimal and we hope to host any student who wants to be part of this university. A: Like all universities, UoPeople must comply with the rules established by accreditation agencies. UoPeople intends to apply for accreditation as soon as the two-year waiting period for eligibility is met. UPDATE: The People's University was accredited by the Distance Education Accrediting Commission (DEAC) in February 2014. A: My time Cramster.com taught me the value of peer-to-peer learning and its strength as a pedagogical model in maintaining high retention rates. In addition, UoPeople plans to offer guidance and support to students after graduation, however specific programs are still in development. A: Higher education has been an unachieved dream for too many people, for too long. UoPeople opens its doors so that a teenager from a rural village in Africa has the same opportunity to go to college as someone who attended New York's most prestigious high school. And UoPeople provides not only four years of education to students around the world, but also the building blocks to continue creating a better life, community, and world.
